"That Strain Again!"

The When counted as many as 'steen bands of music in the Knights Templar parade yesterday. Music hath charms to sooth a savage, soften a stone and split a cabbage. Whether music has displayed its charms this week here to this effect or not is not recorded. It is recorded that this has been a great week in the city. But Knights Templar Triennials can't last forever, and this one will soon be a thing of the past. Yet St. Louis can be comforted, the When will stay right with it, and to comfort it, now invites every one to call at 210 and 212 North Fifth street, and be convinced that we make the most magnificent display of Men's, Boys' and Children's Clothing and Gents' Furnishings in the West, and that our prices are lower through all of our stocks than same qualities at any competing house.

STILL RAGING.

THE REVOLUTION CONTINUED TO THE INTERIOR OF SAN DOMINGO.

Ex-President Gregorio Billini and His Brother Prisoners at the Capital—Lies Circulated by Both Parties—Gen. Heureux's Campaign a Failure—The Rise and Fall of a Restaurant as Admiral of the Revolutionary Navy.

By Telegram to the Post-Dispatch.
New York, September 24.—The revolution in San Domingo is still raging, but continues to be confined to the interior. Were it not for the stagnation of business, visitors at the seaports would not imagine that anything unusual was taking place. No one is heard speaking publicly about the revolution, unless it is by some Government agent circulating lies. People who sympathize with the revolutionists have to keep very quiet, because openly expressed sympathy with the Moyistas will almost inevitably lead to prison. The prisons at the seaports are all full. Ex-President Gregorio Billini and his brother, Hippolyte, who was Dominican Consul in New York for some time, are prisoners at the capital. They are closely confined, and are allowed to see their friends (subject to the approval of the Governor) on Saturday only. Sometimes this rule is relaxed. It is still very difficult to procure trustworthy information, false reports are circulated by both sides. Gen. Heureux, who imitates a distinguished English commander in prophesying that on certain dates he will have accomplished certain things, has so far proved as unsuccessful in his prophecies as his brother prophet. In the beginning of August, on his arrival at La Vega.

"THE HARBOUR OF THE WEST INDIES," as his loquacious chief announced that "within twenty days the revolution would be over and its leaders driven to refuge in the woods of the Morro at Monte Cristi," and then, it is said, took steps for the renewal and clearer understanding of a treaty with Haiti, by the asylum of political refugees from either country is denied in the other. From what can be learned he has done absolutely nothing toward carrying out his announced intentions. On the contrary, he has been defeated in every important engagement that has been fought. From La Vega he marched to Moca and stayed there about twenty days. Meanwhile his friends were murmuring and wanting an explanation of his reason for not marching to the relief of Santiago, the roads to which were in the hands of the Moya party, and where the besieged were in a bad state for provisions. The Moya party did not want to come to the town, being fearful that if they did they might in turn be hemmed in by the Government troops and find themselves in the position now occupied by the others. On August 25 Heureux marched to attack the Moya troops, encamped at Juacamal, near Santiago. He was defeated, and lost a number of men and two of his most important generals, Paulin Espallard and Garcia, were taken prisoners. The revolutionists have a cordon of troops surrounding Santiago, though they have strong bodies of men on all the roads leading into the town. Gen. Heureux managed to get through with about 300 men, and reached the town until the night of the 25th, when during a severe thunderstorm he got out and made his way back to Moca. He eventually found Santiago not in a position to sustain a siege. When he got back to Moca, he started for Puerto Plata, accompanied by Gen. Fred Lithgow, to confer with Gen. Latorre, his fellow dictator. By taking a circuitous route and avoiding the high road they reached Puerto Plata, and decided that Gen. Lithgow should take command of the outpost at Alta Mira, on the high road between Santiago and Puerto Plata. The former commander of that post, Gen. Gaudier, having been several times defeated in battles made with the idea of clearing the road to Santiago, and having been alternately taken prisoner by the revolutionists. Gen. Lithgow is a brave man and some serious fighting is now looked for. On Heureux's arrival he ordered several arrests among the most prominent citizens. His orders were partly carried out when Gen. Latorre interfered and stopped the arrests. This action on the part is said to have made a breach between him and Heureux. Heureux succeeded in raising some money in the Puerto Plata. It is said he got about $10,000, part loaned by some of the merchants and the rest raised by levying the salaries of all Government employees, and cutting off the pay entirely of the judges of the district courts. Merchants are not unwilling to lend money to the Government, because not only are they secure in payment whether the Government is defeated or not, but the also get an enormous rate of interest. Heureux returned to Moca the first week in this month, taking a road down the coast then across the country. It was expected that September 11, a concerted attack would be made upon the revolutionists. The latter have evidently got plenty of men, whatever their financial condition may be. Several men who had been captured by the Moya party were released, their arms and ammunition being taken from them. Gregorio Bredet was until the outbreak of the revolution, a quiet trader in Puerto Plata, where he had a little shop and restaurant. During the elections he attached himself to the Moya party and was a very active partisan, consequently he found himself obliged to clear out of town as soon as the election was over. Gen. Bredet weighs about 250 pounds, and it is supposed from his subsequent action that he considered that his services as a naval leader would be of greater advantage to his party. It may also have occurred to him that he would be more dignified, glory, etc., obtainable as the only admiral of his side, than as only one of an army of generals. Mr. Bredet and some of his men, having learned that the schooner Diana was loading tobacco at San Felipe, a port between Puerto Plata and Monte Cristi, proceeded to that place and took possession of the vessel and cargo. The admiral then made sail with his prize for Monte Cristi (the only port of the revolutionists), discharged the cargo, was received with great rejoicing and immediately appointed commander of the port. Capt. Phillips, the master of the schooner, took advantage of the celebration and fled away in the darkness of the night, and made sail for Turk's Island, where he anchored his schooner in safety, having, however, left behind him tobacco in the hands of the Moya troops and was loading for that place. At San Felipe, the schooner Diana was seized by Admiral van Wier, who, it is stated, put the schooner in a jail, embarked himself, the tobacco taken from the Diana, $1,000 in Mexican silver and a Capt. Backley as navigator, and set out for Turk's Island with the intention of selling the tobacco, and with the proceeds and the cash in hand, buying arms and provisions for his party. The admiral's knowledge of maritime law is evidently limited, for he sailed under the Dominican flag flying on the Russian bark, Admiral Bredet and Navigator Backley were hailed off to prison, and as the ship of this writing were still in duration. A dispatch spoken of as "Private Bredet," a dispatch has been sent to Jamaica for a man-of-war to be sent to Monte Cristi to demand the release of Capt. Backley and it is hard to say what complications may not arise between the British Majesty's Government and San Domingo before this affair is settled.

THE PACIFIC COLONY.

Two Thousand Residents of Wisconsin to Locate in Old Mexico.

Lancaster, Wis., September 24.—A colony has been formed to locate in the Pacific Colony, which will emigrate to Topolobampo, Mexico, October 1, on a grant of 10,000 acres of land from the Mexican Government.
